wood characteristics

MAPLE is the number one choice for kitchen cabinets presently. It is known for its sheer adaptability, and has a smooth, fine grain that accepts color well. No matter what the style, it will blend seamlessly with the rest of your kitchen.

OAK has traditionally been the most popular choice for kitchen cabinetry and it's easy to see why. It has a coarse texture that can be made more pronounced with a dark stain, or lessened with a lighter stain. It's very durable and doesn't expand with humidity as much as other woods.

RIFT WHITE OAK is more durable, less porous, finer textured, has better color than red oak; it is considered better for furniture and cabinet work.

ALDER is a wood that has just recently come into favor as cabinet material. It has very little grain, is very pale, accepts stains easily, and can easily be colored any shade you'd like. This peach-colored wood is often substituted for cherry, with a similar tight, even grain, though it is somewhat lighter in appearance.

HICKORY is a very hard wood. The patterns create a wonderful warm color variation which adds not only warmth, but style to any kitchen. This type of wood is mostly used to make kitchen cabinets, but can also serve well as furniture because of its resilience and endurance.

CHERRY has been used in upscale kitchens for decades. It has a very smooth, uniform grain and can be stained many shades, but the most common is a deep brown-red. The word cherry comes with reason because it does turn more red over time, especially when exposed to direct sunlight.

WALNUT varies from dark tan to deep chocolate depending on amount of exposure to air prior to drying. Grain varies from very straight to interlocked which produces pronounced figure that may or may not be desirable. Pink knots with small dark centers may be prevalent.

THERMOFOIL & MELAMINE doors are easy to clean and maintain, and come in a wide range of styles and colors. Whether it's a high gloss look for the contemporary style kitchen or traditional wood grain doors, the possibility for Thermofoil and Melamine are endless.

TEXTURED MELAMINE is engineered veneer that provides endless opportunity in creating the look of the most common, to the most exotic and rare species. These textured melamine doors are perfect for contemporary styling while maintaining an eco-friendly balance.
